Lin Ea Cenholt (29) and Christian Peter Lübeck (30) showed promising moves already back when they began betting on Nacra in 2015, for example by winning the European Cup in sailing in Holland and five additional top-ten placements at international events.

The Rio Olympics was unfortunately not meant to be, but Lübeck was instead selected as a 49er sailor and won fourth place with Jonas Warrer. Shortly after the Olympics, Cenholt and Lübeck resumed their Nacra collaboration with renewed vigour. On the podium twice in 2017, they cemented their trajectory toward being among the world's absolute best.

In February 2018 Lübeck was in a serious accident while training, which led to a three-month break that put a wrench in preparations for the European Championship in Poland and the World Championship in Aarhus the same year. The crew nevertheless won a bronze in the former and a fourth place in the latter on home territory in Aarhus, Denmark. In 2019 the two athletes once again demonstrated that they belong among the elite by winning bronze in the European Championship and later silver in the World Championship.

Over the years Cenholt and Lübeck have honed their teamwork and worked intensely to perform under pressure. Most recently they spent the entire winter focussing especially on navigating in waves.

Although only very few events have been held due to Corona in recent months, the pair have provided world-class performances. Now it is a question of bringing home a medal during the Tokyo Olympics.
